26th Sunday in Ordinary Time Reflection

The Spirit is at work in the world, and we would do well to recognize it and rejoice. We must create institutions to serve, honor, and fulfill the human dignity God intends. And this means being open to the imaginative, lively Spirit. The first reading and the Gospel assume that the Spirit is at work in the world and the task of individuals and institutions is to promote that work, not to cage it, control it, or contribute to its demise. The second reading warns us away from the Spirit-killing and soul-numbing actions and attitudes that always threaten. The warnings of James were true in the first century; they are true in this one: accumulation of money and possessions for their own sake is useless and not worthy of human endeavor. We all know spirited people. They're the ones who brighten and enliven our lives and who challenge and disturb our lives. They people for whom things deeply matter, and people who draw our attention to what really matters. These people come in all shapes, sizes, colors, genders, and races. We can find them within and outside of our faith communities. They seem to have God's ear and speak God's mind. We have a name for spirited people like these. We call them prophets. They are our hearts and souls. Prophets are Spirit-filled and Spirit-driven. They do not so much predict futures as remind us of our heritage, our past. They anchor us to our calling, God's promise, our dignity as children of God. They are the most conservative and progressive of voices. The prophets speak God's will; they do not coddle our whims. We know the official leaders of our people. We know the authorities who are charged to help order our daily lives so that good work gets done and we are safe. But who are the Spirit-filled people we admire? Who claims the allegiance of our heart? Who speaks most strongly with God's voice? Do you? After all, Moses' wish is fulfilled: the Lord's Spirit has been bestowed on all.

NEWPORT CENTRAL CATHOLIC HOMECOMING WEEKEND

Peasant Oktoberfest and Bonfire, Friday, October 2

All students, parents, friends and Alumni are invited

The first weekend of October Newport Central Catholic's newly refurbished school will be transformed into a Medieval marvel of fun. The renaissance begins on Friday, October 2 with the 2nd Annual Bonfire Cook-out. Tracing back historical roots to days of German peasants and nobles, Brats and Hot Dogs will be flying off the grill with our own Oktoberfest as we listen to music by Gary Devoto and several NCC students.

All alumni are invited to join us after the football game versus the Newport High School at Newport Stadium. There is no charge to attend, and brats and hot dogs will be sold at pleasantly low prices!

Just like the Renaissance, NCC is celebrating its' own rebirth this year with the new addition and renovations to our school. Don't miss out on this great opportunity to come tour the new facilities and to see the improvements to school's campus.

Following the Friday evening peasant uprising on the hill, Saturday evening goes glam with "A Knight to Remember" student Homecoming Dance in the school gym.
